Summit is one of the leading suppliers of heavy products and fabricated components to its world-renowned customer group. We are committed to adhering to relevant ESG (Environmental, Social & Governmental) standards, as well as relevant legislative and regulatory requirements.

Summit's quality policy acts as a framework for its quality objectives, which combine customer focused objectives with that specific to the continual improvement of the business and its quality management system. The policy is part of a wider quality management system, which is integrated into daily activities and aligns with the requirements of the ISO9001 standard.

Summit understand that customers want:

- Components and parts that are dimensionally correct to their specifications.
- Effective communication with its supply chain.
- Receipt of products within the agreed timeframe.
- Products made from materials that are compliant with their specifications, as well as ethically and sustainably sourced.

Employee Responsibility:

We have established a dedicated quality department, whose main responsibility is to drive continual improvement through international standard adherence, common engineering quality related practices and specific customer requirements. Having a quality department doesn't relinquish employee day-to-day responsibilities, some of which are:

- Supporting the implementation and adherence of company quality processes, procedures and policies.
- The conversion of documented customer requirements into physical products that are correct to the specification.
- The reporting of non-conformances relevant to the quality management system.
